

Writers Blog: Slow Train To Spain [6] A.I.

A.I. is very very dangerous, as long as we care more for the growth in algorithymes, riddles and rhythms, U-man goes down the drain. As long as we care more for curiosity sake, than for God sake-tomorrow or the day after a million years manana goes down the drain. Pride, huh? Hubris huh? U can only sell your soul once. I'd say: Save Our United Love.

Watch Lex Fridman, Max Tagmark, Elon Musk, on this subject, their interviews and podcasts, kept on warning about the dangers of A. I. for many many many years, but nobody listened. And now it is almost too late. Max Tagmark & friends wrote a letter to plee for a halfyear time-out to all businesses and lobbeys, cooperations and corporations all around the world to take the patience to endure a time-out, for only half a year, to be able to think about that worst case scenario's and the ways to prevent that horror scenario where A.I. is so much more clever than we, humans, U-man are, who invented them, that this A.I. does no longer need us, disgusting creatures of flesh and blood, pooping and pissing and farting and fucking and dying and doing all kind of other disgusting things beyond that kinda slavery that made us useful for a while, but now it seems more efficient to get rid of us all together.

My perhaps very stupid and naive idea would be to fill this A.I., for example a Chat GPT, fillit with LOVE. The input is LOVE, Talk about all versions and interpretations and meaning of LOVE. And if he himself, Chat, does like to experience what that means. What do U think: Is it stupid or a SOULUTION?
